This three-day course is designed to meet the educational needs of breast imaging and general radiologists, as well as other clinicians, who are involved in the care of patients undergoing diagnostic or interventional radiology procedures. Faculty will present current methods and future trends in breast cancer detection and diagnosis. Digital breast tomosynthesis, ultrasound, and MRI will be discussed, as well as secondary screening techniques (abbreviated MRI, whole breast ultrasound, and molecular breast imaging) and screening controversies. Minimally invasive biopsies and new therapies will be reviewed. Current research and methods to include under-represented populations will be considered. This meeting will address breast cancer topics from a multidisciplinary point-of-view, presented by speakers from Europe, the United States, and Israel.
